DID YOU KNOW ...

Before 1702, there was East Jersey Province and West Jersey Province. And each had its own capital city—Perth Amboy (photo) in the east and Burlington in the west. And even though the united New Jersey joined the union in 1787, it wasn't until 1790 that Trenton became the capital. It had served a two-year stint in 1783-84 as the U.S. capital when the Second Continental Congress met there, and might have become the national capital if it weren't for George Washington's preference for the District of Columbia. The original capitol building was completed in Trenton in 1792.
