Government affects my everyday life, so I need to pay attention.
Most elected officials are everyday people who commit themselves to public service.
Debate, disagreement and compromise are a natural part of the legislative process.
The duty of a citizen is to pay attention to government and politics and contact elected officials about issues and problems.
A legislator visit to a classroom is a good way to learn about civics and government.
I have an understanding of our system of representative democracy.
I will register and vote when I am eligible.
