Reallocating Incarcerated Persons for Redistricting webpage
The majority of states count persons incarcerated in state and federal correctional facilities as residents of the district where they are confined. However, there are a handful of states that reallocate prisoners from the prison location to their residence prior to incarceration. This webpage details those eight states that have passed laws modifying how incarcerated persons are counted and allocated during the redistricting process.

Jailhouse (Census) Block blog
For most, the census process is simple: People are counted as residents in the census block where they live. For those incarcerated, however, this process is not so clear cut.

NCSL’s Redistricting Law 2020 book
NCSL’s most comprehensive redistricting resource includes chapters on 10 major legal topics related to redistricting. While several chapters are critical for everyone, some people may find particular chapters more relevant to their work than others.

Into the Thicket: A Redistricting Starter Kit for Legislative Staff webpage
For those who are thinking about the practicalities of redistricting, this webpage helps legislators and legislative staff gear up for the once-a-decade task of redistricting.

Get Ready to Redistrict: Seminars for Practitioners and Others webpage
NCSL has two upcoming redistricting seminars in Portland, Ore. (September 10-13, 2020) and Washington, D.C. (January 2021). Each seminar includes essential redistricting staples, but each seminar is and will be unique. In Portland, we’ll highlight legal issues and provide the latest legal updates, and in Washington, D.C., we’ll do a review of all topics.
