Arkansas Senators Elect New Pro Tempore

The Arkansas Senate elected Jimmy Hickey (R) to serve as the next pro tempore, from 2021 to 2023. Assuming his party retains control of the chamber in the fall, Hickey will succeed Jim Hendren (R), the current pro temp. Hickey, 53, has served in the Senate since 2013.

Connecticut Senate Minority Leader to Retire

Len Fasano (R) announced he would not seek a 10th term. Fasano, 61, won his Senate seat with an upset victory in 2002. He succeeded John P. McKinney as caucus leader after the 2014 election cycle. A centrist, Fasano earned a reputation for working across the aisle. “Len and I have worked together countless times to solve problems, help people in need and get vital things done,” Senate President Martin M. Looney (D) told ctnmirror.org.

Florida Republicans Choose New Leaders

Senate Wilson Simpson (R) was selected to succeed Senator Bill Galvano (R) as the upper chamber’s next president. Simpson, 55, was first elected to his seat in 2012. Assuming Republicans maintain control of the chamber, he will have a hand in the next redistricting with Representative Chris Sprowls (R), who is in line to become speaker.

Wisconsin’s Longest Serving Female Leader to Retire

Senator Jennifer Shilling (D) announced she will not seek re-election after 20 years in state politics. Shilling joined the Assembly in 2000 and was elected to the Senate in a special election in 2011. She was elected to serve as minority leader in 2014 and is the longest serving female leader in state history. Senator James Bewley (D) will replace Shilling as the minority leader. Bewley, 68, was elected to the Assembly in 2010 and to the Senate in 2014.

Choose New Leaders

LEADERS ON THE MOVE

State Legislatures

1. “I can’t think of a better use for a rainy day fund.”

   West Virginia Senate President Mitch Carmichael (R) on allocating money to cover projected revenue shortages caused by pushing back the state tax return filing deadline, from wvnwv.com.

2. NCSSL’s Child Welfare Program Picks Up National Award

   When the National Foundation to End Child Abuse and Neglect announced a contest calling for ideas to transform training in the field of child abuse and neglect, NCSSL’s Child Welfare team responded. In a paper produced with Florida State University and Prevent Child Abuse America, the team argues that child welfare policy would benefit from greater use of state-specific data and structured collaboration among researchers, policymakers and practitioners. All of that, they write, requires training that breaks down silos in the field.

   EndCAN, as the foundation is known, selected the team’s paper, “Bridging the Gaps Between Research, Policy and Practice in the Field of Child Maltreatment Through Cross-Sector Training and Innovation,” as the winner in the education and training category. The award comes with a cash prize to help put the idea to work, along with publication in the International Journal on Child Maltreatment.

   Among the paper’s authors were NCSSL’s Donna Wilson, Nina Williams-Mbengue and Wade Fickler.

3. EndCAN Last in a Long Line

   ERA ENDER

   In Louisiana politics, Huey P. “Kingfish” Long was larger than life. But let’s not forget the others in the colorful Long family political dynasty—namely Russell, “Uncle” Earl, Carl, Speedy, Jimmy and Gerald. They’re all part of a line that began with Long’s election to the Public Service Commission in 1918. After that a succession of Longs served in the state legislature, the governor’s office and Congress.

   But, when Louisiana Senator President Pro Tem Gerald Long (R), above, left the legislature in January, it marked the first time in a century there wasn’t someone with his family’s name serving in elective office. Long was term-limited after serving 12 years in the Senate. “It’s the end of an era,” he told theneworleans.com. Long, 75, of Natchitoches (where “Steel Magnolias” was filmed), was a rare Republican in a famously Democratic family. “I don’t have a child or a grandchild or a cousin who is even talking about running for elective office.”

   “You’ve created civility in this chamber. You walk the walk, and I’m grateful for that.”

   Florida Senator Tom Lee (R) during a farewell tribute to outgoing Senate President Bill Galvano (R), from floridapolitics.com.

4. “I feel like I’m living in extrovert hell. It’s not the most important issue at this time, but it’s been enlightening to examine how I get my energy. And what it feels like—emotionally and physically—to be distant from others.”

   Vermont Senate Majority Leader Becca Balint (D) on the forced isolation of working from home during the pandemic, from her column in the Brattleboro Reformer.

5. “You have an 86-year-old on a ventilator and you also have a 26-year-old in the ER. Who gets the ventilator?”

   Tennessee Senator Katrina Robinson (D), an intensive care nurse who went to work in a New York hospital after her state ended its isolation of working from home during the pandemic, from her column in the Brattleboro Reformer.

   “We can come out of this pandemic stronger than ever if we look out for our neighbors.”

   Maine Senate President Troy Jackson (D) in a letter to constituents, from mycounty.me.