A TWO-GENERATION APPROACH IN COLORADO

Three priorities shaping Colorado’s two-generation approach:

- Families achieve self-sufficiency through work
- Wealth is achieved through financial literacy
- Children succeed through early learning
A Two-Generation Approach in Colorado

- Create “dual” approach to employment for BOTH parents to improve child economic well-being

- Increase pathways to realize college education and learn financial savings habits through matched college funds

- Expand access to high-quality child care for low income families
A TWO-GENERATION APPROACH

All Families Achieve through Work

- Research confirms that children do best when both parents are involved in their lives.

- Social welfare policy has not kept pace with growth of joint custody and shared parenting arrangements.

- Goal is to demonstrate that children will do better if both parents are supported to achieve work and to show that work “pays”.

A TWO-GENERATION APPROACH

All Families Achieve through Work

- Colorado Parent Employment Program
  - A pilot program through child support to assist non-custodial parents to gain employment

- Re-hire Colorado
  - Transitional jobs program, in partnership with CDLE, OEDIT, and CDHE, to help non-custodial parents re-enter the workforce.

- Colorado “Re-Works”
  - Refocus of our TAN-F employment program to focus on work, pay and retention outcomes, with less process.
A TWO-GENERATION APPROACH

Wealth is Achieved Through Financial Literacy

- Children with the means to attend college are more likely to do so than those without the means

- Help parents to create a pathway to an education for their child that is otherwise not visible to them

- Develop lifelong financial habits around saving
A Two-Generation Approach

Wealth is Achieved Through Financial Literacy

- Conducted a feasibility study to develop a scalable and sustainable child savings accounts and/or college funds for all identified low income children in Colorado

- Public/Private/Philanthropic Partnership in development
A TWO-GENERATION APPROACH

Strengthening Families And Child Care Professionals

- Five Protective Factors
  - Parental Resilience
  - Social Connections
  - Parenting and Child Development
  - Concrete Supports
  - Social/Emotional Development (Bonding and Attachment)
A Two-Generation Approach

Children Achieve through Early Learning

- Children who attend high-quality child care are more prepared for kindergarten and achieve better life-long outcomes.

- Low income families do not have the same access to high-quality programs as middle-class or wealthy families.

- State policy views “child care” as a work support strategy.

- Shift culture to recognize child care as both a work support for parents AND educational strategy for kids.
A Two-Generation Approach
