

DIRECTORY OF REGIONAL HUMAN SERVICE TRANSPORTATION COORDINATING COUNCILS

This directory is part of the report, Regional Human Service Transportation Coordinating Councils: Synthesis, Case Studies and Directory, produced by the National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL) in Jan. 2012 with support from the Federal Transit Administration and U.S. Department of Labor. It includes all regional coordinating councils that could be found in the United States as of Dec. 2011.<sup>1</sup> The rest of the report—including an analysis of the regional coordinating council approach and case studies of regional councils in five states—is available as a separate document on NCSL’s Web site at <http://www.ncsl.org/?tabid=24055>.

Connecticut	Connecticut did not have formal regional coordinating councils as of Dec. 2011. The state does, however, have regional planning agencies that assist with the FTA-required locally developed, coordinated public transit-human services plans. It also has groups that meet bi-monthly concerning employment-related transportation only. The contacts for these groups are listed below.

Minnesota	Minnesota did not have formal regional coordinating councils as of Dec. 2011. FTA-required locally developed, coordinated public transit-human services plans have been completed in all 12 of Minnesota's Economic Development Regions, however, which cover the entire state outside of the Twin Cities metro area. Most plans were completed by regional planning entities called Regional Development Commissions (RDCs) under MnDOT contracts; the process included the creation of regional steering committees that discussed coordination issues. Four of the state's seven Metropolitan Planning Organizations (MPOs) coordinated with RDCs on their plans; the other three MPOs are developing their own plans. The RDCs and MPOs that conducted coordination plans are listed below.
